

Appendix C

The Adjusted Self-Sufficiency Standard for Eight Washington Counties

A Reader's Guide to Appendix C

Appendix C contains our detailed calculations of the Adjusted Self Sufficiency Standard for all eight counties, twelve family types, seven coverage options, and three health status levels. There are two tables for each family type in each county, one with the public coverage options and one with the private coverage options.

The family types are listed in Table 3 of the text (page 13). Each family type represents both numbers of adults and children and ages of each. Age of adult is relevant because BH and individual insurance premiums for adults are age-related (older adults pay higher premiums). Ages of children are relevant because Pearce's estimates of child care costs vary by the age of the child and therefore the most appropriate child care setting (see Appendix A and Pearce, 2001). Other living expenses such as food and clothing also vary by ages as well as numbers of dependents. All adults in each family are assumed to be working full time (and therefore have work-related expenses).

The Standard and the Adjusted Standard figures that appear at the bottoms of the columns should be interpreted to mean the resources (income) that a family needs to cover the basic living expenses estimated in the columns above them. It is not meant as the income the family actually earns, but rather what the family needs to earn in order to pay for its basic living expenses. Some of the coverage scenarios assume that the family qualifies for food stamps and child care subsidies. These subsidies reduce the out of pocket expenses of the family, thereby lowering the income required (the Standard and Adjusted Standard) to meet the remaining expenses.

Several of the expense categories (taxes and tax credits) are determined by the level of other expenses, making the calculation of the Standard and Adjusted Standard an iterative process. Thus these expense categories change when other expenses do.

The first column in each table lists the expense categories that contribute to the Adjusted Standard. A detailed explanation of the non-health care expense categories and the sources of their estimates is in Pearce (2001). Our discussion of the health care expense category begins on page 17 of the text. Tables 6A-D (pages 18 to 21) present the figures we used.

The second (shaded) column gives Pearce's Self Sufficiency Standard expenses with her (single) estimate of health care expenses. The Standard is presented as the hourly wage that each adult must earn as well as both the monthly and annual family income required to cover all basic living expenses for this family type in this county.

The remaining columns give the estimated expenses and resulting Adjusted Standard figures for the various coverage options. For purposes of calculating the Adjusted Standard, the Medicaid label represents all the Medicaid programs for which there is no cost sharing. BH/BH Plus represents the option of adults covered by BH and all dependent children covered by BH Plus. The columns with supports indicate the family expenses net of the value of food stamps and child care expenses. The WSHIP column represents the option of one family member in WSHIP and the remaining members covered by individual policies. Additional detail on coverage options appears in the text beginning on page 14.

For all coverage options except Medicaid, there are three columns representing the three health status levels (healthy, average, and sick). Healthy families are assumed to have no health care expenses above the premiums they pay for their coverage option. Average and sick families have both premiums and out-of-pocket expenses for some combination of deductibles, co-payments, and coinsurance (see text, pages 16-17). We assume no cost sharing of any kind for families covered by Medicaid for the calculations in Appendix C.

At the bottom of each page of public coverage options, there is a notation about the income eligibility for both Medicaid and BH/BH Plus of families in each scenario. For purposes of determining income eligibility for Medicaid, we used the TANF income calculation rules (income minus half of income minus work-related child care expenses) and the TANF income limits (see Table 9, page 27 for the limits and an illustrative eligibility calculation). For BH/BH Plus, we used the BH rule for determining income (income minus child care expenses up to $650) and compared it with the BH income limits (see Table 10, page 28 for BH limits and an illustrative eligibility calculation). For simplicity, we assumed all family members have the same eligibility status (dependent children are typically eligible at higher income levels than adults)
